How do fellow desk jockey redditors make money on the side? (legally)

When I was doing this in full force, I made around $10k a year extra. It does ta ke a lot of work with packaging, sending things off, answering questions and providing customer service when something isn't right. Sometimes you have to ta ke a hit on an item. eBay feedback is decently important for small sellers like me. The effort you put in is what you get out.

List your item lowest if the demand is high. People tend not to bid on items tha t are close to the typical ending price of other auctions. You want as many peop le bidding as possible and sometimes that leads to it selling for way more than it should. You want a bidding war. >3

Put a "Buy it Now" price on high demand items that is based on the oth er lowest Buy it Now prices. I usually stay within 10 listings of the lowest one available.

You don't need a super complicated design like most of the large companies u se. Content is better than visuals. eBay helps a lot with information.

Check your shipping costs to make them accurate. I would always just guess and c harge a flat rate that I sometimes made money on or lost on.

Concerning fees, eBay and Paypal take a lot of money overall. I try to stick to items that I'll make a 100%+ profit on to help curb those costs. Its easier than you think. I refuse to lose money on a deal.
